ABSTRACT

The document is intended to provide teachers and parents of preschool or kindergarten aurally handicapped children with a resource of materials and books which can be used to provide and supplement experiences for the child. Play and other manipulative materials are analyzed in chart form according to the skill(s) which they develop. Included are such materials as water and sand toys, wheel toys, blocks, rhythm and listening materials, woodworking supplies, dramatic play materials, art and science activities, readiness materials, language materials, visual aids, games, and puzzles. Indicated for each item are publisher or manufacturer, catalog number, and list price. Another section lists books on various topics, which are also evaluated in chart form. Indicated are title, author, publisher, copyright date, price, major interest topics, auditory content, quality of pictures, and language principles found in the book. A final section lists regional programs in Illinois and referral sources. (KW)

Senate Bill 324

SYNOPSIS:

Creates Child Hearing Test Act authorizes the Department of Public Health to establish and administer a program of hearing screening services which are: identification, testing, evaluation and initiation of follow-up services as defined in the rules and regulations of the Department of the Superintendent of Public Instruction. Hearing screening services shall be administered to all children no later than their first year in any school, day care center or residential facility and periodically thereafter. Defines duties, requires program testing to be in effect September 1, 1970.

This project was initiated by OSPI to help in the development of educational follow-up for hard-of-hearing pre-school children.

- Don't be afraid of a hearing impairment - Learn about it!
- Have patience.
- Communicate! If you're receptive the child will communicate with you.
- Talk as you would to a hearing child.
- Use facial expressions; they are important for understanding.
- Be sure the child understands what you mean. If you have to repeat, rephrase.
- When speaking to the child have face at his eye level.
- Include the child in school and family conversations.
- Give the child something to hear.
- Expect from child what is within his social and mental limits.

OVERVIEW OF SKILLS DEVELOPMENT 1.

Independence and Self-Worth

- Developing a feeling of adequacy and self-worth. "I like myself.:

Language Skills

- Developing spoken language
- Recognizing and naming people and objects
- Comprehending spoken language
- Expressing ideas in spoken words
- Learning new words
- Discovering new ways to use words
- Using verbal communication

Conceptual Skills

- Acquiring new knowledge of the world
- Using language to develop logical thinking
- Seeing relationships
- Classifying
- Seeing similarities and differences

Overview of Skills Development (Cont'd.)

Conceptual Skills (Cont'd.)

- Developing sequential awareness
- Grasping the relationship between spoken words, printed text, and illustrations.
- Coping with simple problem solving.
- Recognizing differences in number, shape, size and color.
- Organizing experiences into appropriate responses.
- Incorporating new ideas into earlier cognitive structure.
- Drawing conclusions.

Perceptual Skills

- Developing greater sensory awareness (seeing, hearing, tasting, smelling, feeling).

Visual Discrimination

- Selecting and separating parts from the whole.
- Differentiating in terms of size, shape and color.
- Focusing attention on specifics.
- Extending visual attention span.
- Developing eye movement from left to right.

Overview of Skills Development (Cont'd.)

Auditory Discrimination

- Attending
- Recognizing differences in sounds and words
- Extending the aural attention span

Motor Skills

- Learning through use of hands and fingers
- Learning to handle books, puzzles, and games.
- Developing eye-hand coordination.
- Developing kinetic ability in terms of size, shape, and space.
- Controlling strength

Large Motor

- Translating ideas into specific physical actions.
- Learning to control body movements in relationship to the environment.

1 - WATER AND SAND PLAY

Water and sand play provide rich sensory experiences. The child feels, splashes, drips, pats, measures, pours and listens.

It is a release for tensions. It gives the child an opportunity for dramatic role playing.

It promotes conceptual growth. A child can have experiences with size and volume by filling containers; with weight and bouyancy by noting what sinks and floats; with temperature by noting effects of hot, warm, cold; with texture by feeling smooth, coarse, wet, dry.

Other experiences with soap and water can stimulate washing, blowing bubbles and the feeling of slippery.

Water and sand play is an excellent opportunity for language development and social interaction.

2 - CLIMBING - WHEEL TOYS

All children have to climb! Climbing develops strength, develops body skills and promotes control of body movements. Climbing is essential for the development of large muscles and it exercises all parts of the body. It allows the child to experiment with gravity and physical forces.

Climbing offers many opportunities for social interaction and dramatic play for children.

Wheel toys help the child to develop higher levels of coordination and body control. James Hymes, Jr. said, "A child learns in mobility." This mobility reaches a high level between the ages three to five. A child loves to push, pull and ride.

3 - BLOCKS

Blocks are important in the total development of a child. Blocks aid in developing physical skills. They promote the development of cooperative play and social activity which leads to language development.

Blocks also aid in the development of concept formation. Arithmetic concepts such as size, quantity, and language - smaller than, bigger than, larger than, higher than. Science concepts such as gravity.

Blocks also promote creative expression and dramatic play.

4 - RHYTHM & LISTENING

Rhythmic movements are natural and necessary for a child's growth. The natural impulse to dance is inherent in every child. The parent and teacher need only to draw it out by giving the child security and the freedom to express himself. The child should be given guidance in expressing his own feelings of rhythm in a more controlled and coordinated manner.

Rhythms should not be restricted to only planned periods with specific objectives but should be sprinkled throughout the day in free spontaneous movements. They should reflect the child's real interests and experiences. They should be fairly short, simple and express a single idea or mood.

Children need to experiment with their bodies; to see how he can control it to go up, down, around, and in any direction. Rhythms aid in developing physical skills of balance and body coordination. It helps a child to gain a sense of growth, satisfaction, confidence and self-esteem.

Children need to experiment with many different sounds and note the difference in their tonal qualities.

5 - WOODWORKING

Woodworking provides an opportunity for a child to experiment, to be creative, and to be imaginative. The end product may be crude but the process of learning and achieving in this first-hand experience is very meaningful to the child.

Constant supervision by an adult is most important. Both boys and girls enjoy woodworking. This activity should be limited to a maximum of four children at a time.

- DRAMATIC PLAY

Dramatic play gives the child many opportunities for language development. It leads to the understanding of the grown-up role by dramatizing "mommy, daddy, and baby," and others. It helps the child handle the problem of being "little;" he can be "big" for a while. It makes a child feel less helpless and more important.

Social relationships are developed and deepened through dramatic play. Dramatic play helps the fearful or troubled child to express and release his apprehensions and tensions. It mirrors his fears, fantasies, and conflicts and helps him find a way to handle a problem or a negative feeling.

The parent or teacher's role in dramatic play is to provide the props, to have a flexible program, to provide freedom from interference, to provide a variety of "real experiences" by taking field trips and using visual aids. The parent or teacher guides the play by knowing when to move into the play: a) an invitation, b) when the play is disintegrating, c) when a child needs help in entering or leaving the play. The parent or teacher knows when to move out of the play and to be a good listener and observer.

Dress-up clothes are an important aspect of dramatic play. They help the child explore the grown-up world. Dress-up clothes should be selected for color and texture interest.

Puppets are another part of dramatic play. Puppets are a stand-in for the child; the child can project himself into a puppet and then can know himself as others know him. Puppets can become the accepted object through which flow the language, thoughts and feelings of the child.

7 - ART

Art activities for the young child are predominately manipulative. The child will progressively become more aware of his environment through a variety of planned art experiences where he is able to see, feel, smell and even taste the media.

First the large muscles develop, eye-hand coordination increases, shape and color concepts start to build toward reading readiness. The child will develop social skills by learning to share, to take turns, and to accept responsibility for using materials and cleaning up after the activity.

Art experiences can help a child relax and release tensions. They stimulate imagination and encourage language development.

Painting and drawing are a natural means of communication for the young child. He expresses what is on his mind at the moment. He does not reflect reality in painting or care if the painting is beautiful. He wants to tell what he has in his mind. Later as he matures, not only the process is important but the completion of an end product will become a goal for success.

8 - SCIENCE

Science activities provide a way for the child to develop skills in thinking and reasoning; and to stimulate curiosity and exploration.

The child should have many opportunities to experience the excitement of discovery.

The parent and teacher's role is to help the child see all the wonders around him and to bring into school things that will further develop their interest and guide them to a greater awareness of their environment.

9 - READINESS ACTIVITIES

Readiness activities are important in perceptual, conceptual and language development. They develop a child's powers of observation, attention, and concentration.

Readiness activities as provided through small manipulative toys and activities, puzzles, lottos, and games that allow the child to manipulate and control his rate of learning.

Readiness materials should be diversified so the child has a variety of ways of learning a concept. Readiness materials should provide an environment in which a child can select activities that meet his maturational level and provide opportunities for onward, upward and outward growth.

ANALYSIS OF BOOKS:

Part II

Criteria for Evaluating Books

A. Numbers of pages

The number of pages has been given so the teacher or parent can determine if the length of the book will be suitable to meet the needs of the child or group of children. For example: does the child have the attention span to enjoy this book.

B. Major Topics

The major topics cover the general areas or units common to a pre-school, kindergarten program. This will be helpful to the teacher and parent in finding books to meet a particular interest.

C. Auditory Content

Auditory experiences are important for the hard-of-hearing child. He needs the opportunity to listen and be exposed to sounds in his environment so he can develop totally.

1. Pictures in the book are related to auditory experiences.
   If the pictures indicate noise or sounds, they should be emphasized and made an integral part of the story.

C. Auditory Content (Cont'd.)

2. The story text is related to auditory experiences. If the text indicates noise and sounds this again should be emphasized and made an integral part of the story.

D. Quality of the Pictures

Pictures in a book for young children are of major importance. Children enjoy pictures which are colored, realistic, simple and with uncluttered backgrounds.

1. The pictures relate the sequential development of the story. The characters, sequence, and actions can be understood by pictures alone.
2. The pictures supplement the story's text. The pictures give added information but do not aid in telling the story or follow the sequence.
3. The pictures illustrate selective passages in the story's text. The pictures aid in telling the story but do not follow the story's sequence.

D. Quality of the Pictures (Cont'd.)

4. The pictures are realistic.
5. The pictures are impressionistic.
6. The pictures are photographs.
7. The pictures are black and white.
8. The pictures are colored.
9. The pictures are multi-ethnic.

E. Language principles found in book.

In choosing a book for young hard-of-hearing children it is important to consider the language in the books. Too much language and unfamiliar language in a story is confusing. Also, a story that presents a variety of concepts will be confusing.

1. The book contains no text.
2. The book is written in single words.
3. The book is written in single words and modifiers.
4. The book is written in simple sentences.
5. The book is written in compound-complex sentences.
6. Special language characteristics in the text.

E. Language Principles found in book (Cont'd.)

a. The text emphasizes adjectives.

b. The text emphasizes adverbs.

c. The text emphasizes conjunctions.

d. The text emphasizes nouns.

e. The text emphasizes prepositions and prepositional phrases.

f. The text emphasizes pronouns.

g. The text emphasizes the question form.

h. The text emphasizes verbs.

i. Other special language characteristics.

BOOKS TO BE ADAPTED

There are many more excellent children's books that have not been listed. We must keep in mind, however, for the hard-of-hearing child, the language in many books is too difficult for him to understand. By adapting these books they can provide enrichment and enjoyment for the hard-of-hearing child. Books can easily be adapted by doing the following:

a) follow the sequence of the story and simplify the language;
b) use the story in dramatic play;
c) use the pictures to tell the story;
d) and any other creative means to make the story more meaningful and fun for the child.

The following lists are examples of some of the many fine works of children's literature that would need adapting for the hard-of-hearing chid.
